Interior of Roslin Chapel. A gem of Gothic architecture founded by Sir William St. Clair, Baron of Roslin and Earl of Orkney in 1446. It was dedicated to St. Matthew and designed to be a Collegiate Church, "with a provost, six prebendaries, and two choristers"; but the only parts completed were the chancel and lady chapel. It suffered at the hands of a mob in 1688, but is in admirable preservation, and is a goal of pilgrimage for artists and others. The interior of the chapel is of rich and elaborate design and exquisite workmanship, especially the lady chapel, in the south-east corner of which is the "Prentice Pillar."
